Why I Create Program's Emphasis on Soft Skills is Important! Two Take-aways

Harsh Bhargava, Founder, I Create India attended the Global Youth Economic Opportunity Summit in Washington DC where stakeholders in development work including the World Bank, Microsoft, Harvard and MIT, and thought leaders from 55 countries participated.

Two key take-aways:

"Yes, I think I have good people skills. What kind of idiot question is that?"

- 1. Why companies and countries are not firing on all cylinders: The youth who is joining the workforce lacks the relevant soft skills (the other terms used for it were noncognitive mindset attributes, professional skills or socioemotional intelligence). In other words- they are deficient in many of the attributes identified in our Competitiveness Mindset Study.
- 2. How to reach millions of youth and provide them structured learning programs in soft skills: There were a number of solutions offered but one clear winner was to create mobile based platform that has games and apps that can provide interactive ways to help a large number learn the skills.

Many organizations are working on this and have begun to pilot such online learning- including Edx- a platform created jointly by Harvard and MIT, or others being developed by Microsoft. Even Google, OCED are working on it.

Glimpses from the CMS Programs conducted across the country

Feedback received from the CMS Participants

- "In future, if we face the problem of unemployment, this program has helped us to start our own business. We have understood what the benefits are if we start our own business instead of working under someone.' -Shashikummar H M, 5th Sem, Machine Tool Tech Dept. Govt. Polytechnic, Hassan
- "After studies, I wanted to join a job. But, during CMS, I have gathered so much information / knowledge that, I have decided to start my own business. Akshitha Kulakani, 5TH SEM, Govt.Polytechnic, Raichur.
- "The knowledge you have given from this training is really extraordinary. How means basically I am interested in business and was searching related knowledge and thinking where to go and get it. At the same time you have given training and feel fortunate and proud of it. It means you have taught related skill in a very simple and systematic way besides how to make profit and infused courage. Whatever I tell will not be sufficient, really I am very happy and definitely using these skills will establish business. Laxmibai.I.BadigerIly Govt. Polytechnic, Hubli
